Background

In an age where technology-enabled support continues to expand, the diabetes care and education specialist (CDCES) is uniquely positioned to provide expertise.

With education and care for the person with diabetes firmly at its core, the CDCES credential invites us to work collaboratively with the healthcare team and industry to improve outcomes.

This poster reviews the history of the CDCES credential, and how the OSUWMC CDCES practice group leverages its expertise to develop and deliver technology-enabled diabetes and cardiometabolic health services in the rapidly changing healthcare environment.
